Emerging Black Arts Leaders Apprenticeship

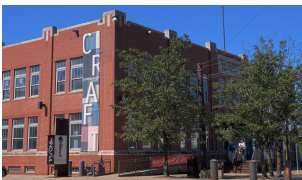

In June 2015, the first comprehensive survey of diversity in American art museums was released by The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation in partnership with the Association of Art Museum Directors and the American Alliance of Museums. The report illustrated a troubling underrepresentation of people of color on museum staffs, with only 4% of museum curators, conservators, and educators identifying as African-American. The Society for Contemporary Craft's (SCC) new Emerging Black Arts Leaders program addresses this disparity by awarding a one-year apprenticeship, which pays a monthly stipend, to a talented emerging arts leader of color.

"We are committed to providing employment and mentoring opportunities for young individuals of color," says SCC Executive Director Janet McCall. "By helping these emerging arts managers prepare to successfully enter the leadership pipeline, we are ensuring a future where the demographics of museum employees more closely match the vibrant diversity of our society as a whole."

The one-year management apprenticeship will provide career-readiness skills and mentoring to increase the employability of a talented emerging arts manager of color. Through on-the-job training in a professional arts organization, the program will equip the apprentice with supplemental artistic and business skills required to succeed in the field today. The Emerging Black Arts Leader Apprentice will also benefit from professional development and networking opportunities within the regional arts community. With hands-on experience working at a contemporary art center, the apprentice will learn to navigate the intricacies of a complex nonprofit environment, and assist with exhibition and education programs, fundraising, and special events. This position is made possible with support from the Opportunity Fund.
